History

Yesid Pérez, born in Huila - Colombia, is a second-generation coffee farmer who has dedicated his life to cultivating coffee, carrying forward a family tradition built on hard work, perseverance, and deep respect for the land. From an early age, he understood that coffee was more than a crop — it was a legacy to honor and elevate.

For many years, his farm followed a traditional coffee-growing model. But driven by curiosity and a desire to grow, Yesid made a pivotal decision: transitioning into specialty coffee. This shift marked a turning point, opening the door to a new production vision and greater recognition for the exceptional quality of his coffee.

This transformation required discipline and intention. Yesid refined his practices by implementing meticulous cherry selection, precise fermentation control, and carefully managed drying processes. Every detail matters. Every step shapes the cup profile. Through this commitment, his coffees now stand out for their exotic notes, complexity, and distinctive character.

Tradition, Passion, and Evolution in Every Bean

Yet his story goes beyond quality in the cup. Coffee farming is the foundation of his family's livelihood. Together with his wife, daughters, and son, Yesid has built a sustainable life project rooted in the farm. The harvest has generated not only income, but opportunity: his children have been able to access education and pursue professional careers, bringing new knowledge that strengthens and projects the future of their family's coffee tradition. Yesid approaches the land with genuine passion. He carefully monitors each plant, nurtures the soil, and respects nature's timing. This close connection to the farm, combined with rigorous processing methods, allows his coffee to preserve remarkable aromas and memorable flavors — securing its place within the competitive specialty coffee market.

Yesid Pérez's journey reflects the power of generational continuity and the importance of uniting tradition with innovation. His story proves that coffee farming can be a sustainable family endeavor — one capable of creating economic growth, educational opportunity, and a meaningful future rooted in the land.
